Drugged, Beaten, Abused and Sold

In California, sex trafficking isn’t a “violent” crime. Seriously.

Under California law, more than 20 clearly violent crimes are not classified as “violent,” including selling a child for sex, rape of an unconscious person and domestic violence — tools of the trade for sex trafficking.

In California, offenders convicted of sex trafficking are considered “non-violent,” making them eligible for early prison release — without their victims being warned.

Proposition 20 prohibits the early release of offenders convicted of sex trafficking — because selling a child for sex is a violent crime.

Stand with survivors at keepcalsafe.org.